The purpose of the RFP (Registered Forestry Professional) scheme is to provide the public, employers, and clients confidence that they are dealing with a trained, competent, and up-to-date professional forester.

Registrants, who are known as Registered Forestry Professionals and designated RFP, use broadly interpreted, demonstrated knowledge relevant to forest management. They continually update that knowledge and apply it with skill.

Registration in the RFP scheme is a logical step in career development. It provides further opportunities for foresters who have had at least five years' professional or technical experience as a practitioner, including at least two years' relevant experience in Australia.
